Like a "Former Pedagogue," I can see me objection to the inscription on the Conrederate monument in Hollywood, except that I would prefer one in English that all the friends of the dead heroes could read. Please state the objections again, for I do not remember them distinctly. If it is grammatical, as "Former Pedagogue shows, for who can object to the authorities of distinguished Latin writers, the sentiment is good enough-"I stand for my God and my country"-as the dead soldiers stood up in defence of a duty they believed they owed to their God and their country. The inscription proposed by some of your correspondents, and which you commend, has one objection—the difficulty of rendering it properly in English. The soldiers did not really perish " with their country. Most of them-perhaps all-perished before their country did, or before the Confederany fell. Jacent is present time. Probaby they repose for their country and with their country might be better. But few see so hopeless as to believe our country perished with the surrender of the Confederate Government. Many believe it was thre of our posterity. Try again, and give gentlemen of America got into the habit of as a good common-sense English inscrip- met a lady, it would be rather more starttion.
